The first paper “Development of a scale measure for green employee workplace practices” (Morgan & Rayner, 2019) identifies latent variables that explain green workplace attitudes, behaviours and practices. Exploratory factor analysis of a 371 employees across three industry sectors revealed a four factor structure explaining green workplace attitudes, behaviours and practices: environmental knowledge; environmental workplace AMO; global environmental attitudes, and; organisation and the environment.

The second paper “Information Accountability in a Non-profit Organisation” (France & Regmi, 2019) examines the extent of information disclosed by a non-profit organisation to the stakeholders of customers, donors, employees, and volunteers. A structured questionnaire was provided to the stakeholders of a non-profit organisation. The responses were disaggregated by stakeholder group and information type and then analysed. Stakeholder groups indicated that they get less information than they consider important, but are satisfied with the information they receive. The research results also show that employees give less importance to strategic information, receive less strategic information, and are less satisfied with strategic information than other forms of information.

The third paper “Social responsibility reporting and ecological modernisation: A case study of a Chinese Automobile Company” (Deng & Bowrey, 2019) examines the environmental accounting practices of a major Chinese automobile company, Dongfeng Motor Corporation, in the light of recent environmental reforms in China brought about by ecological modernization. Using content analysis the study found that the Dongfeng Motor Corporation improved its social responsibility reporting from 2009 to 2012 and that the social responsibility disclosures were in accordance with the discursive formation from the central government of China.

The fourth paper “Book Review ~ Insolvent Trading and Fraudulent Trading in Australia: Regulation and Context” (Buscombe, 2019) provides a review of the book and its contribution to the legal sector as well as the accounting sector concerned with insolvent trading and fraudulent trading by management in corporations.
